KILAUEA ACTIVE AND QUAKES ARE FELT IN HILO

[Special Star-Bulletin Correspondence] HILO, Sept. 4.—There was an earthquake, or rather three shakes, about midnight on Tuesday and several restless sleepers in Hilo felt the earth tremors. The quakes were not very severe say those who felt them, but there was no mistaking the fact that old Mother Earth was having a spasm of some sort. The renewed activity of Kilauea volcano is thought by laymen to have had something to do with the quakes.

The shocks as described by one resident, who was awakened by the agitation of the earth's surface, seemed to come from the south and travel north. The tremors followed one another rapidly.

No damage, as far as could be learned, was done by the earthquake and the shakes did not amount to anything serious, in the town of Hilo.

Latest reports from the volcano state that the crater is very active just now, more so than it has been for some time past. On Saturday evening last a party made the trip and the visitors say that new cones are forming and that, while there is no large lake of fire, there are constant fountains of molten lava to be seen playing. Old Faithful is getting very restless, and the indications are that Kilauea is due for another display somewhat like that of two years ago.

The new cones are being built and demolished in quick order, and the fountains are very beautiful to watch after dark. Some of the cones are very large, while others are smaller. The prediction of those who know the crater well is to the effect that the volcano is waking up again, and that some fine exhibitions of the antics of the only volcano in captivity are soon to be seen again.

Eight hundred million dollars were spent for warships and equipment last year by the great nations.
